Coming Together for the Land: How NRLT Began 25 Years Ago

This year, the Northcoast Regional Land Trust (NRLT) is turning 25. As we celebrate this big milestone, we want to share the story of how it all began — with two friends, a big idea, and a group of people who believed in working together to protect the land they loved. In a recent conversation with NRLT founders David McMurray and Rondall Snodgrass, they shared their stories about NRLT's early days, and the enduring values that have guided us since day one.

David and Rondall first began working together in southern Humboldt in the late 1980s. They were quick to recall the “timber wars,” a divisive and emotional time in our region, no matter where your beliefs fell on the spectrum. In the midst of that tension, a story was unfolding in the Mattole River watershed that would lead to a regionwide conservation effort. At the Redwoods Monastery, Sister Miriam Darden noticed tags on trees bordering the monastery's forest and she gathered a small group of concerned citizens to protect it—among them Rondall and David.

“We found that cooperation and negotiation rather than confrontation was a good strategy,” said Rondall. “So we bought the land, trusting that the funds would appear when we really needed them,” David adds, laughing. “That’s just how we did things back then.”

This grassroots group would go on to form Sanctuary Forest, a watershed-based land trust which still operates today. By the

From the Executive Director

Earlier this month, NRLT board members, advisors, and staff gathered to celebrate the expanding corridors of conserved working lands, wildlife habitat, and the people – including you – who have made it possible through support in its many forms. We feel incredibly thankful for everyone who has made this organization what it is today!

As we celebrate the Northcoast Regional Land Trust's 25th anniversary, it is inspiring to hear the stories of this organization's beginnings, take pride in all that has been accomplished together, and reflect on the importance of continuity for generations to come. In this issue we also celebrate the recently completed Butler Valley Ranch conservation easement – a story that showcases a multi-generational commitment to land stewardship.

All of our work together – from 65,000 acres conserved (and counting!), to ongoing wetland and oak woodland restoration, to community programs and educational field trips – has been possible because of supporters like you.

In a time when many of our nation's institutions are being challenged – including many of the public trust agencies that have been so important to carrying out our Land Trust's mission – organizations like NRLT will likely play an even more important role in conserving the places we all care about, the resources we depend on, and the vital habitats that are part of our world's splendor.

So, thank you, dear reader, for being a part of the important work that was envisioned 25 years ago, and with all of you we will continue to lead in conserving the wild and working lands that make this corner of the world so extraordinary.

With gratitude,

Dan Ehresman, Executive Director

NRLT's Mission: The Northcoast Regional Land Trust is dedicated to the protection and economic viability of working landscapes, farms, forests and grazing lands, and to the preservation and protection of land for its natural, educational, scenic and historic values. We work with landowners on a voluntary basis to promote stewardship of Northern California's healthy and productive resource base, natural systems and quality of life.

A Family Legacy: Protecting Butler Valley Ranch for Future Generations

We're proud to announce the permanent protection of Butler Valley Ranch – NRLT's most recently completed conservation easement and one rooted in deep family ties, a love for the land, and a legacy of stewardship.

Owned by the Carrington family since the late 1970s, Butler Valley Ranch spans 2,440 acres of farmland, forests, and rangeland nestled along the Mad River. This private working landscape produces food, timber, and hay – but its impact stretches far beyond the fenceline. With over 3.5 miles of riverfront, the ranch supports clean water, native grasslands, and habitat for Roosevelt elk, eagles, salmon, and more. By protecting this land, we're safeguarding what makes Humboldt County special: natural beauty, clean waters, land-based livelihoods, and a shared sense of place.

"It's just a gorgeous piece," says landowner Francis Carrington, who first partnered with NRLT to conserve the Iaqua Ranch nearly two decades ago. "It's got everything – elk, deer, trees – and we raised our kids there on the river. Sometimes we can hear salmon swimming upstream in the riffle."

Thanks to the Carringtons' vision and a grant from the California Department of Conservation's Sustainable Agricultural Lands Conservation Program, this land will remain whole and productive, even as pressures on rural properties continue to grow. "At the time we first bought it, we were always scared they would build a dam," Francis recalled. "They voted it down just at the last minute. Now, the right thing is happening to the ranch."

Today, Francis's grandson Derek manages the ranch and is raising his own children in the same house he grew up in. "I wouldn't take it away for anything," he says. "My kids absolutely love the ranch – they never want to leave."

Butler Valley Ranch

Derek's approach to land management reflects both tradition and care. "We're old-fashioned. It's just me, my wife, and our kids out here – no fancy equipment. We grow hay to feed our cattle through the winter, rotate them through pastures, and take care of what needs doing," he explains. "Pretty much as organic as you can get – we don't fertilize, don't spray. Just try to keep it clean and healthy."

His daily work – mending fences, prepping for hay season, rotating cattle, and pulling invasive thistles – helps ensure the ranch's ecological health while honoring the family's vision. "I just hope it stays the same," Derek says. "Ranching on large properties is kind of going away in California, but I think it should stick around. There's so much wildlife out here, and it's really nice to get to witness it."

This easement also marks a full-circle moment: Butler Valley Ranch is the Carringtons' second property conserved with NRLT, after Iaqua Ranch – NRLT's first ever conservation easement project completed back in 2006.

"This is about continuity," says NRLT Executive Director Dan Ehresman. "It's about honoring the past, supporting the present, and protecting treasured lands for future generations."

While each easement is unique, the Carringtons have now voluntarily limited future development on two expansive properties – conserving over 7,000 acres in the region. By donating a portion of the easement's value back to NRLT and making a capacity contribution, they are also helping to ensure that our organization can continue this important work.

"It's a wonderful program, whether people understand it or not," Francis said. "You give up development rights, but you get to keep the ranch and do almost anything you would with a ranch. This is a dream come true."

Funds for the Butler Valley Ranch Conservation Easement were made available through the California Strategic Growth Council's Sustainable Agricultural Lands Conservation Program (SALC) in collaboration with the Department of Conservation. SALC is part of California Climate Investments, a statewide initiative that puts billions of Cap-and-Trade dollars to work reducing greenhouse gas emissions, strengthening the economy, and improving public health and the environment – particularly in disadvantaged communities.

late 1990s, there were other land trusts like Sanctuary Forest protecting lands at the local level, like Jacoby Creek and McKinleyville Land Trusts, but there were still great swaths of open space and productive lands beyond the scope of those organizations – lands that were being split up and sold at an increasing pace. Broken into smaller and smaller pieces, habitat was fragmented and they lost their ability to be economically viable working ranches and forestlands.

It was Rondall who first voiced the idea of a larger regional land trust – one that could span timber, agriculture, and conservation interests, and serve as a bridge between communities. “We needed something that could represent all the people who love and work this land.”

David believed in the idea too. Together, they invited people from across the region to join them – ranchers, farmers, timber workers, scientists, and community leaders – in a feasibility study to hear their needs and determine if a regional land trust could provide a possible solution. For six months, they met once a month at 6 a.m. for breakfast at the Woodley Island marina. The meetings were early, but the conversations were powerful.

“We didn’t always agree,” Rondall said, “David really put his heart into it, and his background as a counselor really showed us all how to listen. And we found common ground.”

After those six months, the group decided: yes – we can do this. With help from supporters like Carrie Grant and Annette Holland, NRLT quickly became an official nonprofit after the completion of the feasibility study.

When it came to securing early funding, they paired the grounded practicality of local ranchers with the passionate energy of environmental advocates in their pitch to the Columbia Foundation. “We had boots and Birkenstocks,” David laughed. “And they loved it.” That meeting brought in the first grant to help launch the land trust.

This spirit of partnership is reflected in the early board, which included figures like rancher Steve Hackett, forester Kim Browning, organic farmer John LaBoyteaux, and Humboldt State University (now CalPoly Humboldt) biologist, Jeff Dunk. The diversity of perspectives helped build credibility and trust across the North Coast’s cultural and economic divides.

“Our approach wasn’t about taking over land,” Rondall said. “It was about preserving continuity of habitat and resource values for humans and wildlife alike – against the pressures of change.” The foundations laid in NRLT’s early years, from early stewardship of Baker Creek (the organization’s first land protection project) to educational forums with landowners, have led to our present successes conserving more than 65,000 acres across our region.

All the while, there’s been continuity across landscapes and over time, as the original values remain: work with respect, listen to different voices, and protect the land – both wild and working – for the future.

Looking back, both David and Rondall emphasize that their shared legacy was one of complementary leadership. “Rondall was the eagle – visionary, soaring above. I was the field mouse,” David smiled, “keeping things moving on the ground.”

Today, NRLT is made up of a strong team of staff, board members, landowners, community supporters, and early visionaries like David and Rondall – who still come around the office occasionally to cheer on the team, share advice, and drop some spare dollars in the tip jar.

Their story is a reminder that land conservation is not just about property or policy – it’s about relationships, perseverance, and shared love for place. We thank David and Rondall for their vision, their heart, and their belief in what is possible when we work together.

Here’s to the next 25 years, grounded in the same values that sparked it all.

From the Archives: Excerpts from the NRLT Winter-Spring 2003 Newsletter by Carrie Grant

I confess that I did not know what a land trust or a conservation easement was when I was first asked to join in the September 1999 feasibility study group that would evolve into the North-coast Regional Land Trust.

The realization of protecting land in perpetuity, through the tool of a conservation easement, brought profound satisfaction to me through the evolution of my work. As a landscape photographer, no longer were my efforts to inspire protection of the open landscape that I love restricted to placing photographic images in front of my buying audience, as decoration for their homes and offices.

With this new-to-me tool, I saw that my work could evolve beyond mere portrayal of the landscape to actual and permanent protection of it.

— From “Notes from a Founder”

Our group was indeed diverse, and among the earliest discussions was the need to create balance, a bridge, non-extremism, and a common vision. He wanted to protect farmland. She wanted to preserve pristine forests. He wanted to ensure long-term family ownership and management of family ranches, farms, and dairies. She wanted to protect wildlife habitat. He wanted to provide public trails. He wanted to ensure economic stability on timberlands. We struggled, we squirmed to stretch beyond our individual ethics and personal goals to incorporate and respect each other’s needs and priorities.

As perspectives and visions were expressed over the first three feasibility study meetings, it was determined that we all wanted to protect open space, whether it be ranch land, timber land, riparian corridors, or forest preserves. We were passionate about maintaining open space. Vistas. Unpaved land.

As we developed our original Board of Directors in 2000, with David McMurray as our first president, we looked to the future and found ultimately our goals were the same.

Through debate, argument, understanding and laughter, we reach for the bridge, while maintaining our diversity.

ANNUAL REPORT 2024

ACHIEVEMENTS

The Northcoast Regional Land Trust is pleased to provide our partners with an accounting of accomplishments for 2024.

- We completed two conservation easement projects – on the Butte Creek Ranch and the Butler Valley Ranch – that will permanently protect over 5,000 acres of agricultural land and diverse habitats in the Mad River and Van Duzen Watersheds. This work was made possible thanks to the partnership of two multi-generation landowners – the Carrington and Cottrell/Moore families, with support from the Department of Conservation and California Strategic Growth Council's Sustainable Agricultural Lands Conservation program. These projects will ensure that the families can continue to steward these special places, support rural livelihoods, and protect the natural resources that we all depend on.
- Thanks to the partnership of some extraordinary landowners and funding partners – including you – we continued work on ten more conservation projects, four of which are expected to be completed in 2025.
- Our Project Managers oversaw monitoring and stewardship of conservation easements comprising over 65,000 acres of rangeland, forests, and other diverse habitats.
- We secured funding for the Wood Creek Phase III Restoration project that will restore stream and wetland habitats at Freshwater Farms Reserve and the neighboring Felt Ranch.
- We were gifted a special 160-acre property by Richard Hansis, long-time NRLT supporter and conservationist.
- We renewed accreditation with the Land Trust Alliance, ensuring we continue to meet the highest standards for protecting land.
- We welcomed new staff members to the team, including Connor McGuigan, Project Manager, and Riley Martel-Phillips, Admin and Community Engagement Manager.
- The California Coastal Commission awarded NRLT a WhaleTail grant to support opportunities for people to connect with coastal lands at Freshwater Farms Reserve and beyond.
- With support from Humboldt Trails Council, the WhaleTail grant, CalPoly Humboldt, and others, we hosted nine stewardship events and seven interpretive events and tours at Freshwater Farms Reserve.
- Thanks to support from the McLean Foundation and Dean Witter Foundation, more than 300 local students learned about the compatibility of wildlife habitat and agriculture through our Cows & Cattails and High School Biological Monitoring programs.
- We continued our popular friend and fundraising events, including the Summer Celebration with Huckleberry Flint, the Annual Celebration Dinner and Auction, and the Open Office Holiday Party to close out a fantastic year!

Featured Artist – Erica Brooks

Erica, originally from Philadelphia, developed a passion for art at a young age, earning scholarships to study at Moore College of Art. After obtaining her BFA, she moved to Brooklyn but soon sought a quieter setting to focus on her work. She relocated to Humboldt County, where the region's natural beauty became a central inspiration for her landscape paintings.

With an MFA in Fine Art and an MA in Illustration from Academy of Art San Francisco, Erica honed her skills in plein air painting, still life, and portraiture. She served as President of the Redwood Art Association and continues as its Newsletter Chief. She also taught landscape painting at Cal Poly Humboldt.

Now based in Charleston, South Carolina, Erica is an exhibiting artist with the Charleston Artist Guild and a member of Plein Air Painters Carolina. You can find more of her works at fineartbyerica.com.
